Free Mohamed Mohamud End FBI Stings

It's been 13 years since the FBI set up Somali teenager Mohamed Mohamud in a sting operation at Pioneer Courthouse Square. He was 19 at the time and is now 32.

In October, 2014 Judge Garr King sentenced Mohamud to 30 years in prison, despite the young man's forswearing violence and expressing regrets—for a crime the FBI enticed him to do. Mohamud will be 49 when he gets out.

The judge took into consideration what he called "imperfect entrapment" to lower the government's 40-year request, but dismissed claims based on the feds' use of warrantless wiretapping as part of its case.

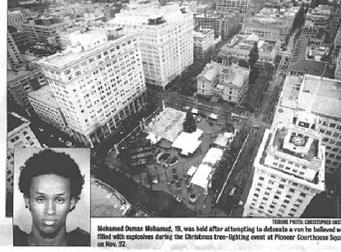

Appealing, Mohamud's lawyers made oral arguments to the Ninth Circuit Court in July 2016, saying the use of unwarranted surveillance violated his rights. The Portland US Attorney's office was awarded for a "successful" prosecution of the case on October 21, 2015, one month after the appeal was filed. The appeal was ultimately denied in March 2017.

In 2023, Mohamud filed another appeal because Judge King admitted that "a member of his family and his law clerk assigned to the case and her family had been at the tree-lighting ceremony that year." The appeal was dismissed in September (Oregonlive, September 21).

Homegrown terror: a threat from within

Man arrested after plotting Federal Reserve bomb, authorities say

STORY HIGHLIGHTS

- The suspect is reported to be a student at a college in Missouri.
- Jay Carney, White House press secretary, says the suspect is a student.

New York (CNN) — Federal authorities running a sting operation arrested a 21-year-old Bangladeshi man, who came to the U.S. on a student visa and was allegedly planning to blow up the Federal Reserve Bank of New York with what he believed was a 1,000-pound bomb, officials said.

In November 2023, the Portland Mercury wrote: “[Mohamud] has reportedly disavowed any sort of violent ideology, tutored fellow incarcerated people on anger management, taken public speaking classes, and helped devise a deradicalization program with other prison personnel.”

Among other things, the FBI took the young Mohamud, who needed emotional and political (and perhaps psychological) help, and rather than aiding him to express himself constructively, helped instead to hatch a phony plot including a van full of fake explosives.

Since 2010, there have been a steady stream of similar sting operations. These stings are predominantly done against Arab, African or other immigrant populations and nearly universally against Muslims. They help foster fear of Islam and perpetuate the narrative that the FBI is stopping terrorism, when in it is their convoluted plots that create the real terror.

A 2016 report by Human Rights Watch noted that “nearly all of the highest-profile domestic terrorism plots in the United States since 9/11 featured the ‘direct involvement’ of government agents or informants,” and 30% involved stings (The Guardian, July 21, 2016). A 2017 multi-part series in the Intercept documents over 800 people prosecuted for terrorism since 9/11, that “most of them never committed an act of violence,” and that over 400 were released from custody.

Mohamud's public defender, Steve Wax, told the press after the sentencing that he wondered whether other families in the future will do what Mohamud's did and reach out to the FBI, since rather than steer him on another path, they “helped” him set up a crime. It is time to end the stings and free Mohamed Mohamud.

Some of the other FBI stings show a pattern and practice of creating problems where none might have existed without law enforcement prompting, starting with a 2014 failure:

—(New York, NY, August 2014) The FBI tried to set up Ahmed Abassi, a 26 year old Tunisian student, preventing him from returning to Canada, paying for an apartment, and suggesting that killing Americans was righteous for Muslims—all of which were done with Mohamud. Abassi “resisted attempts to move to direct action” and the sting ended with a guilty plea on non-terrorism charges of fraud involving immigration documents (Washington Post, Aug. 14, 2014).

US teen arrested after car bomb sting

Posted Sun Sep 16, 2012 11:10am AEST

FBI agents have arrested a teenager who allegedly tried to detonate what he thought was a car bomb outside a bar in downtown Chicago.

The arrest on Friday night (local time) of Adel Daoud, a US citizen, marked the end of an undercover sting operation.

During the operation agents provided him with a fake bomb that he attempted to set off shortly before he was detained, the US Attorney's Office in Chicago said in a statement.

Everyone else involved in the alleged plot to commit mass murder at the heart of the US government appears to have been an FBI agent posing as a member of al-Qaeda.”

—(Newburgh, NY, May 2009) “David Williams was arrested and hit with a 25-year jail sentence. Williams and three other struggling local men beset by drug, criminal and mental health issues were convicted of an Islamic terrorist plot to blow up Jewish synagogues and shoot down military jets with missiles. The organisation, money, weapons and motivation for this plot did not come from real Islamic terrorists. It came from the FBI, and an informant paid to pose as a terrorist mastermind.”

Fake terror plots, paid informants: the tactics of FBI 'entrapment' questioned
Critics say bureau is running a sting operation across America, targeting vulnerable people by luring them into fake terror plots

David Williams did not have an easy life. He moved to Newburgh, a gritty, impoverished town on the banks of the Hudson an hour or so north of New York, at just 10 years old. For a young, black American boy with a father in jail, trouble was everywhere.

(Miami, FL, June 2006) [The sting on Mohamed Mohamud in Portland shows] how far the FBI’s role-playing has come since an early, high-profile sting operation in Miami, Florida, almost fell apart. When federal authorities unveiled that case in 2006, they said seven men from Miami’s impoverished Liberty City neighborhood had planned to destroy the Sears Tower in Chicago. But the plot never got past the discussion stage and the group never had the means to carry out the attack.” [Note: the seven men were all immigrants from Haiti.]

In August 2011, Mother Jones magazine studied 158 so-called Terrorism defendants and found at least 49 incidents where the FBI led the plots using employees. “With three exceptions, all of the high-profile domestic terror plots of the last decade were actually FBI stings. The exceptions are Najibullah Zazi, who came close to bombing the New York City subway system in September 2009 <<http://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/2010/April/10-ag-473.html>> ; Hesham Mohamed Hadayet, an Egyptian who opened fire on the El-Al ticket counter at the Los Angeles airport <<http://abcnews.go.com/US/story?id=91485>>; and failed Times Square bomber Faisal Shahzad <<http://motherjones.com/fbi-terrorist/faisal-shahzad-times-square-car-bomb>>.”

The rise of the undercover sting

By Brian Wheeler
BBC News, Washington

The handling over of British businessman Christopher Tappin to the US authorities has provoked criticism of the extradition treaty between the two countries. But it also puts the use by the FBI and other law enforcement agencies of undercover "stings" in the spotlight.
